Message from Rev. Majima

The Parable of the White Path and the Teachings of Ohigan

During the Ohigan season, many Buddhist temples share the parable of the "Two Rivers and the White Path" (Nigabyakudō). This story, originally taught by the Chinese master Shandao during the Tang Dynasty, symbolizes the Calling voice of Amida Buddha and the path leading beyond the world of delusion to the Pure Land. Let's explore the meaning of this teaching in connection with the Ohigan observance.

The Parable of the Two Rivers and the White Path

A traveler walking through a vast wilderness suddenly finds himself pursued by robbers and wild beasts. Fleeing in fear, he comes across two great rivers that block his path. One is a river of raging fire (symbolizing the flames of worldly desires), and the other is a river of violent waves (representing greed and anger). Crossing either river seems impossible, and death appears inevitable.

Between these two perilous rivers, however, stretches a single narrow White Path. Although the fire and water threaten from both sides, the path offers a way to safety. Overwhelmed by fear, the traveler hesitates, unable to move forward.

At that moment, a voice calls from behind: "Do not hesitate—go forward!" This is the voice of Shakyamuni Buddha. At the same time, from the other side, a voice reassures him: "If you follow this path, you will surely find refuge." This is the compassionate call of Amida Buddha. Trusting in these words, the traveler gathers his courage, steps onto the White Path, and successfully reaches the Pure Land.

Ohigan and the White Path

Ohigan is a time to reflect on the journey from this shore of suffering and confusion (shigan) to the other shore of enlightenment (higan). In Jodo Shinshu, it is particularly regarded as a period to deeply appreciate the boundless compassion of Amida Buddha and the assurance of spiritual liberation.

The parable of the Two Rivers and the White Path perfectly illustrates the significance of Ohigan. In our daily lives, we are often swept away by worldly desires, anger, and confusion, much like the raging fire and water in the story. Obstacles and temptations abound, making it difficult to stay on the path to peace. Yet, even in the midst of such struggles, the great compassion and guidance of Amida Buddha provide a way forward—a path leading us to the Pure Land.

The Courage to Walk the White Path

The most crucial step taken by the traveler in the parable was to trust and move forward. By believing in the call of Amida Buddha, he was able to overcome his fears and reach the shore of awakening.

The Ohigan season is an opportunity for us to reflect on our own path in life and to listen closely to the teachings of the Buddha. No matter how many challenges we face, if we place our entrusting heart in the path to the Pure Land, we are always embraced by Amida Buddha's infinite compassion, leading us beyond the world of suffering.

This Ohigan, let us take the message of the White Path to heart and reflect on the direction of our journey. With the compassionate vow of Amida Buddha as our guide, may we walk the path with courage and trust.

In gratitude,
Mieko Majima

The Story of the Two Rivers and the White Path (for students)

A long time ago, a traveler was walking through a big grassy field. Suddenly, scary wolves and robbers started chasing him! "Oh no! What should I do?" he thought as he ran as fast as he could. But then, he saw two big rivers in front of him.

One river was full of burning fire. "It's so hot! If I try to cross, I will get burned!" The other river had huge, rushing waves. "If I fall in, I will be swept away!"

The traveler was too scared to move. But then, he noticed a thin, white path between the fire and water. "Maybe I can walk on this path and be safe...?" But the fire and water were so close, and he was afraid to take even one step.

Rev. Majima's Message to students from page 2 continued:

Just then, he heard a kind voice from behind him. "It's okay! Don't be afraid, just walk on this path." It sounded just like a father saying, "Trust me, you can do it!"

Then, he heard another voice from the other side of the river. "Come this way! You will be safe here." It sounded just like a mother saying, "I'm waiting for you, so don't worry!"

The traveler thought, "If my father and mother are watching over me, I will be okay!" So, he took a deep breath and stepped onto the white path. His heart was beating fast, but he walked carefully, one step at a time.

Finally, he made it to the other side! He smiled happily and said, "I was scared, but I'm so glad I trusted and kept going!"

Just like the traveler, you are never alone. Someone who loves you is always watching over you, so trust and keep going!

Practical Shin Buddhism in Everyday Life

Rev. Dr. Kenji Akahoshi

“Shifting from Please to Thank You”
A contemporary view of Shin reveals
Gratitude leads to a joyful guide to life

Saturday, April 12, 2025, 3:00 p.m.

Join us for a visit from Reverend Dr. Kenji Akahoshi as he delves into the journey everyone is seeking: “How to lead a joyful life through gratitude in our everyday life.” It is this unique perspective of Shin that guides us to recognize that our lives and our awakening are received from the efforts of others. Interdependence reveals we are truly supported by others and this realization results in a response of gratitude. Our gratitude offers a completely different reality, different from the context of prayer or petition for a personal desire. Gratitude becomes the open gate to a vast field of benefits.
